Publishing Technology moves headquarters to prestigious new office in Oxford Business Park

Oxford, UK - February 1, 2010 - Publishing Technology, the largest provider of software and services for the publishing industry, announced today that it has completed the move from its former offices into a larger, prestigious and contemporary facility in the Oxford Business Park, in order to accommodate the growing organisation.

Previously based in Unipart House, Publishing Technology moved its workforce to the new location at 8100 Alec Issigonis Way, Oxford Business Park North. The new, fully outfitted office will serve as the central nervous system for operation in the UK with support from its team in Bath, and will continue to serve as the base for the business' global headquarters.

"These office moves bring the consolidation of locations post merger of our businesses a big step closer to completion. This move will bring together most key teams in the UK under one roof and provide our staff with a more integrated working environment as well as more modern and a better appointed workspace" said George Lossius, CEO of Publishing Technology.

In the past year, Publishing Technology announced major new projects with Japan's leading online publishing platform SunMedia, Breathing Space, a new semantic web platform, and its launch of ICE Virtual Library, the world's largest online civil engineering resource. 2009 also saw the announcement of the first release of its advance applications for publishers, including Contract, Rights & Royalties and Product Manager.

Publishing Technology also has offices in North America, Brazil and Australia.
